File note on my conversation with Amy Walker at approximately 7.15am on 20th April:

- Amy went out for drinks with her team on Friday evening (16th April)
- Approximately six members of the team had been there at the start (including her), but most left after the first drink
- This left Amy with Mike Shillaker and another person for a short period (but she didn't identify).
- Amy has little memory of events after the second drink and believes her drink was spiked, but has had selective flashbacks
- She says she could not walk without support and was not in a position to resist anything or get herself home.
- She has memories of selective episodes of Mike Shillaker sexually assaulting her, but didn't have a full recollection of the evening.
- She said this has left her severely bruised, but she did not elaborate further to me on the nature of the sexual assault.
- She has memories of passers-by saying "get a room" while some of this was going on.
- Mike left her in CS reception, where her boyfriend came to collect her.
- She had more memories of events the following morning (Saturday 17th April) and went to the hospital then to the police station to report the sexual assault.
- Amy said she had not initially wanted to take things further with the police or report to CS, but on coming into the office had suffered a panic attack and felt she could not easily put this incident behind her or continue to work in the same proximity as Mike Shillaker.
- I left a voicemail for Jen Barker to report the incident. Jen joined the meeting at approximately 8.30am.
- Jen asked Amy what support she needed and whether she wanted to continue to work in the office.
- Amy said she'd prefer to work from home in the coming days and would consider whether to see a doctor paid for by CS.
